

Snapshot of the NYC CHW Workforce

2019 – April 12, 2021

Gathered by the NYC Peer & CHW Workforce Consortium. For more information, email cdannmessier@health.nyc.gov

Data Included in this Brief

The data in this brief was collected by Burning Glass<sup>1</sup> from January 1, 2019 – April 12, 2021. Data is from New York City. It can be difficult to obtain accurate labor market data on the community health worker (CHW) workforce, given the broad array of titles CHWs work under. The goal of this report is to shine light on the CHW workforce that provides non-clinical support to individuals for physical health challenges (NOT mental health and behavioral health challenges.) After a close examination of the job postings associated with a variety of titles, the researcher decided to include and exclude the following job title search terms:

Titles INCLUDED in This Brief	Titles EXCLUDED from This Brief
community health worker	home health aide
community health liaison	nurse
community liaison worker	social worker
CHW	food services
community health adviser	laundry
community health advisor	maintenance
promotores

In total, Burning Glass data identified 254 online job ads which met the search term requirements above.

Peer titles were not included in the search terms. To see in-depth analyses of the peer workforce, visit <https://mailchi.mp/947063156b7f/labor-market-research>. Navigator titles were also not included in the search terms, since the majority of navigator roles were either clinical in nature (requiring nursing credentials), focused narrowly on enrolling individuals in insurance, or supporting individuals with mental health & behavioral health challenges.

It is important to stress that all of the data and information in this brief comes from online job postings meeting the search terms outlined above. This data is not a full accounting of existing CHW jobs in NYC; rather, it is an analysis of online job ads that meet the search terms from 2019 – April 2021.

How to use this information

This data should be used for a big picture understanding of the job openings for the CHW workforce in New York City. This data should be used as a starting point for understanding the demand for CHWs, but specific information should be validated by looking closely at specific job postings and specific employers online. Conversations with both employers and working CHWs will help to provide a clearer, fuller picture of the CHW workforce in New York City.

<sup>1</sup> Burning Glass is the nation's largest database of online job postings, see Appendix for more details.

Job Titles

The table below indicates how frequent (in percentages) specific words were included in a CHW job posting. Community health worker was the most common term, followed by liaison, and outreach. Promotores de salud is not a common job title found in online job ads in NYC.

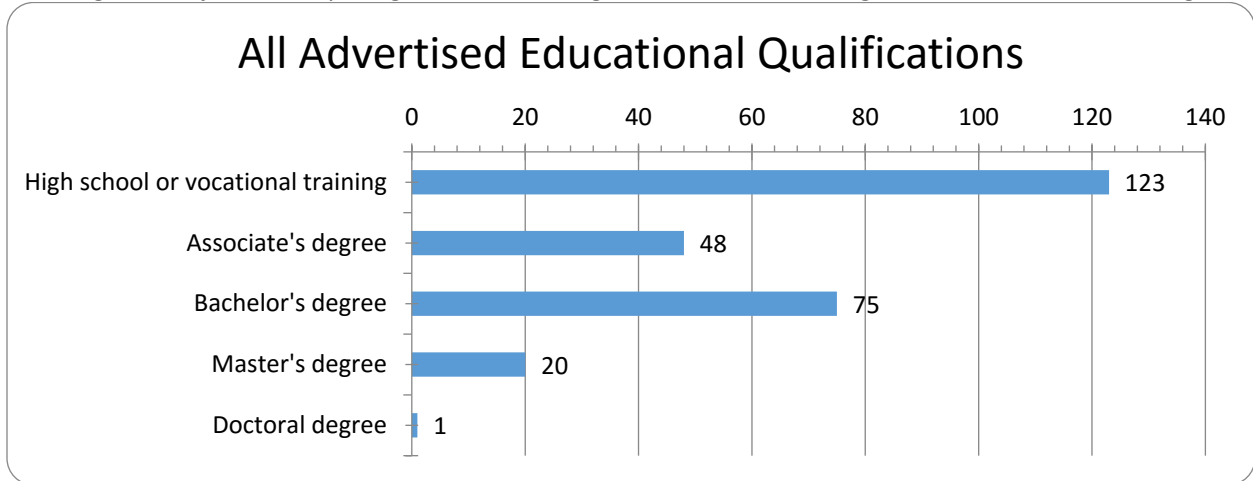

To take a closer look at the 254 online job ads, see the full listing of job postings in the appendix.

Minimum advertised education

This table provides information on both the preferred and minimum/required education levels listed in job postings. For this reason, a job posting may be counted in more than one of the educational categories shown below.

High school or vocational training was the most common advertised educational qualification, but there were significant job ads requiring a bachelor's degree, an associate's degree, or even a master's degree.

Employers

Since 2019, NYC Health & Hospitals had the most advertised job openings by far, followed by the Fund for Public Health, affiliated with the NYC Department of Health and Mental Hygiene. Beyond these public sector employers, insurance companies and community-based organizations are well represented on this list.

For a full list of employers, see the appendix

Experience Required

While many postings (44%) did not list experience requirements, for those that did, 80% of postings required 0-2 years of experience and 18% required 3-5 years of experience, and 2% required 6-8 years.

Salary information

Many job postings do not include salary information. Below is Burning Glass's estimate of the average salary for job postings called Market Salary. Actual compensation may vary based on individual employer salary practices and experience. Market Salary is calculated using a machine-learning model built off of millions of job postings every year, and accounting for adjustments based on locations, industry, skills, experience, education requirements, among other variables.

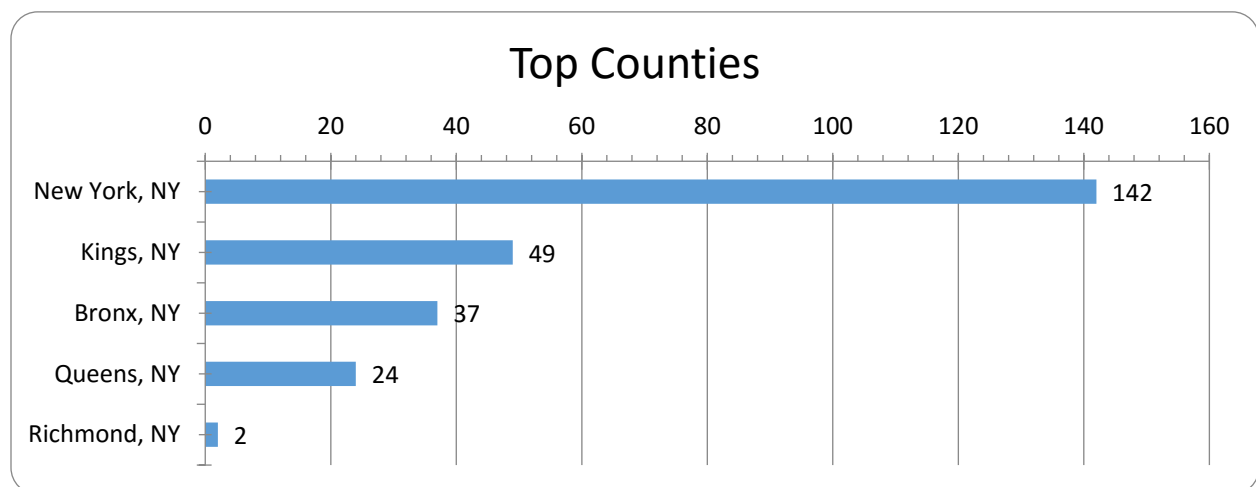

The median estimated annual "Market Salary" for CHW roles is $41,473. If we only looked at posted salary information (included in only 41% of the job postings), the median salary is $40,000.

For more information on how Burning Glass calculates salary information, see the appendix.

Location of Jobs/Organizations

According to the data collected by Burning Glass, the majority of the CHW positions are found in Manhattan (New York County), followed by Brooklyn (Kings County), with Staten Island (Richmond County) having the least amount of jobs. This finding warrants further investigation, as some agencies are headquartered in Manhattan, while the jobs take place in the outer boroughs.

Job postings over time

Monthly CHW job postings have fluctuated greatly since 2014, with a high of 28 postings in March of 2018 (largely due to a significant hiring push by the UnitedHealth Group). Since February 2020 and the beginning of the pandemic there has been a drop in online job ads specifically calling for CHWs. During this time we have seen an increase in online job ads for contact tracers and associated titles not included in this analysis.

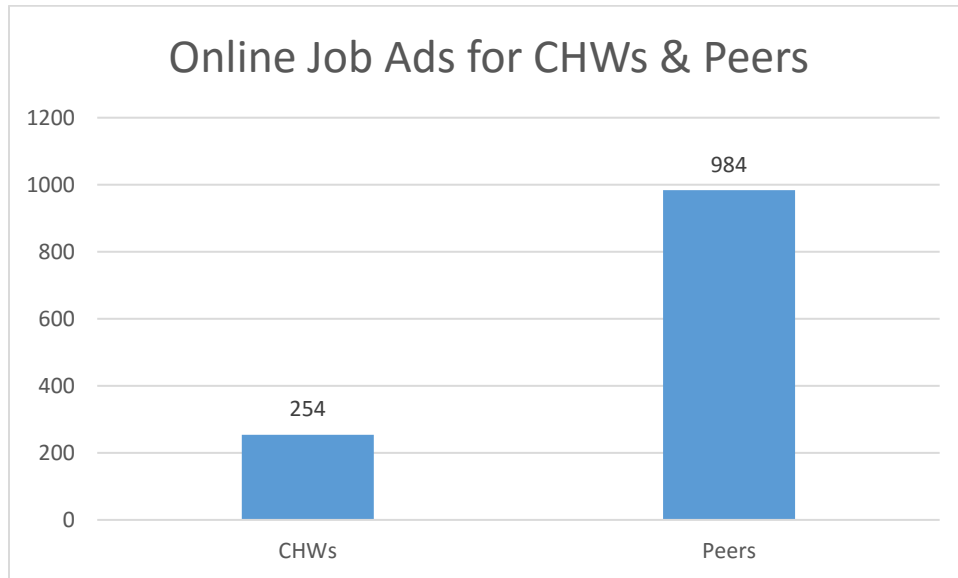

2019 had the highest average monthly job openings. We will continue to closely watch this workforce to see what happens in 2021.

The Number of Peer Job Ads vs. CHWs

From 2019 – April 2021, there were 254 CHW job ads in NYC. During the same time period there were 984 job ads for peers (search terms for peers included three titles: peer specialists, peer advocates, and peer counselors).

Appendix

Burning Glass

This data was collected and analyzed via Burning Glass. Burning Glass is the nation’s largest database of online job postings. Burning Glass uses advanced artificial intelligence text mining to gather information from 45,000 sites and over 1 million postings daily. Burning Glass de-duplicates the postings (removing more than 80% of all postings) in order to get accurate data.

How salary information is calculated

- Salary (Advertised) - Advertised salaries reflect the salaries explicitly listed by the employer (where included).
- Salary (Market) - This is Burning Glass’s estimate of the average salary for job postings in this occupation and geography. Actual compensation may vary based on individual employer salary practices and experience. How is it calculated? Market Salary is calculated using a machine learning model built off of millions of job postings every year; and accounting for adjustments based on 1) locations 2) industry 3) skills and experience and 4) education requirements (among other variables). To develop the Market Salary model we first built a training set of 5 million postings from the last two years which have advertised salaries from employers. Then we use those data to train a neural network machine-learning model which can predict the salaries for the remaining job postings. The model uses the following inputs to predict a salary: job title; occupation; location; employer; industry; education level; skills and experience. To evaluate the performance of the model we tested it against a set of job postings which have advertised salaries but were not part of the training set. The average error or difference between the advertised salary of a job and the predicted base salary for each posting was $3.8K per year. This model meets or exceeds the performance of similar models published by other job data providers including LinkedIn; Payscale; and Adzuna. How is it helpful? Market Salary provides insight into the likely salary workers within a specific occupation; as well as further detail on the impact on salary of additional skills.
