NYAPRS Note: Over 20 years ago, Joe Marrone, then Senior Program Manager for Public Policy at the Institute for Community Inclusion emerged as a leading proponent for employment for people with psychiatric disabilities with these famous words: "If You Think Work is Bad for People with Mental Illness, What About Poverty, Unemployment, and Social Isolation?" Accordingly, Joe's impact on our work ranks akin to psychiatric rehabilitation founder Bill Anthony. NYAPRS is very pleased to host Joe in a new webinar by the same name in which he'll advance strategies on how to avoid long term unemployment and to promote employment as a key component of recovery within systems of care. This webinar is for everyone, including people looking for employment, direct care providers and administrators. Don't miss this one! See below for details and register here today!

If You Think Work Is Bad for People with Mental Illness, What About Poverty, Unemployment, And Social Isolation?

This webinar will focus on the importance of avoiding long term unemployment for people with mental health challenges. We will discuss the progress that has been made and what has impeded more significant accomplishments related to this topic. The presenter will offer ideas about change strategies that can be employed at all levels, from direct care staff to administration, to effectively move the idea of employment forward as a key component of recovery within systems of care.

Date and Time: Tuesday, May 24, 2023, from 12:00-1:15 PM EST

Presented By: Joe Marrone, MS. Recently Retired Senior Program Manager for Public Policy at The Institute for Community Inclusion/U Mass Boston
